Q: What is the current status of the Supportive Living Facility (SLF) Program? Is it ever going to open up for new applications?

A: The SL program remains under a moratorium. There are currently 145 operating SL communities with about 12,000 apartments and 16 approved sites (about 2,000 apartments) under development. The State has not announced when or if the program may open up again. The best guess for how and when the program may open again is for the addition of memory care units as a regular service after the budget impasse is over. The State was satisfied with its 3-year dementia care demonstration project that ended in June 2014 and has said they may be interested in adding dementia care as a regular service when the time is right.
